From the Wilmington Watchman THE TRIPOLITAN OAPTIVE. The moon silvered o'er the rough surge That broke on the Barbary shore; Where Triped's castles emerge.
And Itowa while the hourse billows

Gn a rock that looked over the flood, While the clink of his chains pierced the air.

A son of Columbia stood A statue of woe and despair. Hiseyes in distraction be rolled: His countenance hollow and pale; His sighs would his sorrows have told But his murmura were lost in the gale Oh my country! heart broken he cried, Where now is my liberty gone?
Independence, thy boast and thy pride, Did once at captivity sparn.

This why then this cruel delev, While your children in slavery you see Where's the gold that you lavish away? Where's the valor that once made you

At a distance you hear not my cries, You know not the anguish I hear; Or else when my death shricks arise, Columbia would sure drop a tear. But adien every lish or reproach, My tears ye no longer shall flow; Death rapidly makes his approach To relieve the poor captive of woe. What means this renewal of grief; Oh! my parents, thy sorrows are vain Adieu! you can give no relief; - Adieu! we shall soon meet again.

His knees were now bent to the ground. His eyes in distraction were raised; When suddenly graring around, On the scenery wildly he gazed; Then faintly his last breath he drew "Oh! my country! my country!" he

Like a lifty depressed with the dew, He sunk on his mantle and died.

AGRCUILTURE. AGRICULTURE has been aprly styled the master sinew of every great state; the perennial fountain of wealth. Rural labours are equally sondúcive to health of body and of mind. The mechanick occupations hold only a secondary rank; the culture of the fields constitute the natural and the sound employment of man. Agriculture, says Dr. Robertson clothes our land with grass for cattle, and with the herb for man. She fills our houses with plenty, our hearts with gladness, and puts into our hands the staff of life. The ancient republics afford us several instances of generals & statesmen having exchanged their boisterous employment in war, and politics, for the more peaceable ones of the field, and the cultivatian of the ground; thus adding to the culture of philosophy that of rural economy, and rendering themselves doubly serviceably to their country,

IN ancient times the sacred plough employ'd,
